Siemens unlocks team visibility to avoid productivity clashes

An aCloud TeamSeer case study

The challenge

Siemens Flow Instruments had been grappling with team and absence tracking across the organisation, using several large databases and spreadsheets.

This was a time consuming activity for staff, and ensuring that the information on file was up-to-date was a big challenge.

Before using TeamSeer, holiday approval was a paper-based process that gave managers no visibility of planned team absences when approving holidays. This had led to potentially damaging absence clashes.

The solution

TeamSeer now stores all the information centrally online, making it instantly accessible. Also, because of the unique way TeamSeer works, Siemens's team tracking and absence management is now automated and always up-to-date.

"TeamSeer gives me access to any team information or reports I want straight away, saving me and my staff valuable time"

Richard Johnson, General Manager of Administration

The results

TeamSeer has automated absence approvals and managers now make fully informed decisions when approving holidays. Richard continues: "Before using TeamSeer there was no way for me to see other planned absences for the same period, in the past this has led to frustrating clashes which TeamSeer helps us avoid." Today, TeamSeer gives every member of staff an instant overview of the whole team.

TeamSeer is committed to providing software that helps focus teams by building efficient and collaborative office environments. At Siemens, this has noticeably been the case.

"TeamSeer has been excellent and receives my highest recommendation, we could never imagine returning to our old system".

Richard Johnson,
General Manager Administration
